"Brown's songs, and even his demeanor while performing, simmer with an all-too-human edge that unsettles as much as it thrills—precisely what music should do when it comes from the heart. Where so many musicians working in the country-Americana mold fabricate heartache and wanderlust, Brown doesn't have to fake it."
- (585) Magazine

In addition to a prolific career as a singer-songwriter and multi-instrumentalist, Grammy-nominated artist Mike Brown is an incredibly dynamic and versatile collaborator. His debut record, American Hotel, was self-recorded in all 50 states over the course of 8 years, and features a staggeringly diverse roster of special guests, including members of Counting Crows, Sparklehorse, Bob Dylan, Lynyrd Skynyrd, Matchbox Twenty, the Meat Puppets, Jimi Hendrix, and Jay Bennett, the late guitarist from Wilco.

Brown is also the founder of Temperamental Recordings, a label based out of a renovated church in Geneseo, NY. The church was originally built in 1828, and in 2011 the impressive space and collection was featured on American Pickers.

In 2014 Brown released a CD with a childhood friend Zac DeCamp titled Automatic Music Can Be Fun and, with the help of Brian Grunert from White Bicycle Design Firm, was nominated for a GRAMMY in the Best Recording Package category against Jay-Z, David Bowie, Metallica, and Reckless Kelly.

His next album Songs for Seven Fingers will be released in 2016, and includes members of Band of Horses, Sparklehorse, Eels, and several others.

"Mike Brown, by himself, is a better folk act than most full-scale projects. His skill as a guitarist/dobro player and singer-songwriter is unparalleled. Using a loop pedal, Brown layers and synchronizes beats and progressions, cleverly creating a full band sound that stomps and moves like a raucous barn bash. His lyrics are thought-provoking as they weave over his plucked finger style. It's roots music, and with all the percussive riffs, it revolves and moves much like Native American or African music does, keeping your head bobbing and your dusty boots moving." - Rochester City Newspaper
